35  FACTS AND FIGURES
As an AUC trustee of more than 20 years, I am pleased to have been able to serve AUC as president ad interim last year while we completed our search for AUC’s next president. I found being on campus to be a deeply rewarding opportunity to witness firsthand the vibrancy, activity and commitment of the AUC community.

AUC is a place with a long history and promising future, and every year, we get better and stronger, thanks to the dedication and commitment of the AUC community and University supporters. With AUC’s centennial approaching, we have a unique opportunity to celebrate the growth and maturity of this extraordinary institution and its contributions to Egypt and the region. More importantly, we have an opportunity to celebrate the success and accomplishments of our students and faculty — the core of AUC.

I am pleased to report that with a shift to an entirely need-based financial assistance program, the University has initiated new scholarships targeting public school graduates, STEM scholars and students from different Egyptian governorates to continue to support top-performers from Egypt and the Arab world. Institutional collaborations have also been enhanced, including an MIT grant that allows graduate students from both universities to travel and conduct research.

As the University enters a new phase of its growth and development, it is faced with a new set of challenges and opportunities. But as enduring as its legacy, AUC will continue to thrive and flourish. AUC is a unique institution and a beacon in this part of the world for the freedoms and values that are central to the world-class education AUC provides for its students. With its centennial on the horizon and its strategic plan in place, exciting new opportunities will unfold, and we know we can count on the continuing support of AUC’s trustees, as well as others who realize the value of AUC.

I would like to express my gratitude and appreciation to AUC’s donors, alumni, parents and friends listed in this report. It is because of people like you, who believe in education as an investment in future generations and see AUC as an embodiment of this investment, that the University will be able to continue to fulfill its mission. Your contributions enable AUC to support and maintain its rich legacy; preserve its unique identity as a hallmark of excellence and bridge between East and West; and prepare for a second century of service and education in Egypt, the region and the world.

THOMAS E. THOMASON
PRESIDENT AD INTERIM
JANUARY 1 - JUNE 30, 2016
During the past year, AUC entered a new chapter in its remarkable history. The University welcomed its 12th president, Francis J. Ricciardone, a former career diplomat with years of distinguished service in Egypt and the Middle East. Frank’s unanimous selection by the Presidential Search Committee, made up of 10 trustees and three faculty members, was the result of an extensive international search. Frank is ideally suited to lead AUC on the eve of its 100th anniversary. He has a deep and nuanced understanding of Egypt and the region through his diplomatic career and knows the transformative impact of an American liberal arts education. I would like to take this opportunity to thank AUC Trustee Thomas E. Thomason for his distinguished leadership as president ad interim during this transitional period. Although his tenure was brief, Tom brought tremendous vitality and drive to his stewardship of the University.

Leaving a positive imprint wherever they go, our students and alumni continued to make us proud. Five students and one alum — all women — traveled to Rio de Janeiro this summer to compete in the Olympics; one of our female students — a distinguished athlete and scholarship recipient — has been named the World Junior Squash Champion; and our Model United Nations team won the Outstanding Delegation Award for the seventh year in a row at the global conference in New York. Garnering international recognition, our alumni are occupying prominent positions in Egypt and worldwide, from UN Goodwill Ambassadors, advisers to the IMF and heads of national councils to governors, ministers and parliamentarians, as well as influential leaders named by Forbes Middle East.

The past year has included sorrowful transitions as well. The Board of Trustees lost two of its valuable and dedicated members — Mary Cross, a photojournalist, writer and avid traveler who had a deep passion for Egypt; and Nobel laureate Ahmed Zewail, a global science icon and chemistry professor at Caltech. We will miss their companionship, commitment and unwavering support of AUC.

The board also welcomed two new members: Mark Turnage and Teresa Barger. Both have distinguished careers, studied at AUC and developed an affection for Egypt, the region and the University. We look forward to working with them and all members of the AUC community as the University prepares for its 100th anniversary in 2019.
For President Francis J. Ricciardone, AUC is all about excellence.

“If there is one word to describe AUC and where we want to be in the future, it’s excellence — in all we do, in all we are.”

“To excel means to stand out — by definition, to stand as an exception to the norm, to that which is ‘capped’ by mediocrity or passing fashion,” Ricciardone said. “Excellence demands personal and community discipline and effort, and very substantial fiscal resources. It is rare, and it is not cheap. That’s what we offer at AUC.”
Aliaa Ismail '14 is part of a team of digital conservators from Madrid who are using 3D scanning to create a digital copy, or facsimile, of hidden chambers found in Tutankhamun's tomb. While speculation remains if the chambers hidden behind a wall painting in Tutankhamun’s tomb could contain the tomb of Queen Nefertiti, Ismail and her team are using an array of high-tech technologies — from infrared thermography and radar scanners to fiber optics and robotics — to explore what may lay hidden in the tomb.

"Egyptology taught me to appreciate my heritage — not only so I would want to protect it, but also so I would know how. These tombs were painted in such a way that you can’t always see cracks or openings. For example, the colors of the paint may create an optical illusion, disguising hidden doors. 3D scanners look past the colors, allowing us to see what our eyes can’t see. New technologies, like 3D scanning, are key to preserving our past for the future."
Ricciardone highlighted three main pillars that have defined AUC throughout its first century and must endure as the University enters a second century of service. “Identity, continuity and excellence — everything we do falls into one or all of these categories,” he said.

EXCELLENCE: EVERYTHING ABOUT US
Excellence means a focus on the whole person. “At AUC,” Ricciardone explained, “we train students to be globally qualified, competitive, innovative and giving — demanding in the first instance of themselves, not of others. With an AUC diploma, AUC graduates have the equivalent of a diploma from any school in the United States, in terms of what it says about them as individuals: native-level English and the ability to think analytically and creatively, yet with discipline and focus — to come up with new ways of doing things. AUC graduates welcome and enjoy innovation and creativity. They are not afraid of change. On the contrary, they welcome change as an opportunity to not only identify threats, but also to improve oneself, organization and country. They look beyond the accepted group wisdom.”

Ricciardone emphasized AUC’s holistic approach to excellence:

“When we say ‘excellence,’ it is everything about us — our students, our educational product, the way we conduct ourselves, our morals and values.”
OUR IDENTITY: THE BEST OF EAST AND WEST
Coupled with excellence is AUC’s unique identity. “At our best, AUC is unique in bringing together the best of East and West,” said Ricciardone. “AUC has always been Egypt’s global University, serving as a portal for Egyptians from all walks of life to not only learn English, but also to learn how the outside world works: its science, literature, music, art, comparative religions, economy, business, ideas, innovation. AUC has also been a welcoming portal into Egypt for the world, especially for Americans, and we must maintain this international perspective by attracting international students back to Egypt.”

The University’s location in Cairo and its American liberal arts education, with its emphasis on critical thinking and inquiry-based thought, give AUC its distinctive identity. “Our identity as The American University in Cairo is very precious,” said Ricciardone. “Generations of teachers, students, parents, trustees, alumni and other generous benefactors have sustained AUC throughout a turbulent 20th century.”

“It is a huge privilege to serve as the 12th president in this line of powerful tradition of service and, God willing, to lead us into our second century. We, together, must continue to uphold and preserve this identity.”

CONTINUITY: REPLENISHING RESOURCES, GIVING BACK
Preserving this identity is all about continuity — for AUC and Egypt as a whole. “Continuity stands at the core of the identity of Egypt, a culture and civilization as old and enduring as humanity itself,” said Ricciardone. “Continuity depends, in turn, on sustainability, which no human institution can ever take for granted.”
Muhammad El Gebali is the first AUC student to participate in the annual Mathematical Association of America MathFest conference, where his team ranked first in the event competition and he won the Outstanding Presentation Award for his research. El Gebali’s research was chosen among 140 undergraduate presentations made by more than 200 students, mostly from universities across the United States. El Gebali is an active member of several student organizations at AUC, including the Robotix Club, Khatwa, and the Electronics and Communications Engineering Association.

“I enjoy math because it challenges my knowledge. My dream is to achieve a research position at a university. I also recently discovered that I’m interested in philosophy, so who knows what field of study I will choose to follow in my career.”
Maki Habib has been working for the past four years as an advisory board member and researcher in the TIRAMISU European project, which addresses the need for integrating different technologies to build a global toolbox for demining practices worldwide. One of these tools is the use of robots to clear landmines, a field where Habib has made considerable advancements. In contrast to highly logistical, expensive robots used in many developed countries, Habib is utilizing inexpensive, local resources to create multi-mode, low-cost mobile robots while protecting their sensing and decision-making components.

“Robotization accelerates the demining process and avoids having deminers in direct physical contact with the mines. Lightweight and portable robots are the one type of technology that enables residents to use it easily while, at the same time, keeping in mind the use of local resources in developing it.”

To maintain this continuity, Ricciardone is set on keeping AUC’s resources replenished and growing. “I accepted this responsibility as a labor of love because I believe that AUC is a uniquely worthy place to support for its positive impact on a deeply troubled yet rich, pivotally important and dynamic region of the world,” he said. “At the threshold of our second century, we need to have systems in place — including a culture of managing scrupulously and giving generously — to continuously raise funds for scholarships and to sustain, replenish and grow our resources.”

But continuity is not only about resources; it’s about people who believe in education as an investment that must be constantly renewed. “My job as president — as with presidents of all U.S. nonprofits — is to keep raising funds from people who believe that each generation bears a shared responsibility toward the next, and that supporting high-quality education is the best and most impactful way to discharge that responsibility of the ‘intergenerational compact,’” Ricciardone noted. “At a personal level, all parents accept that responsibility when they become parents, and their gift of an AUC education to their sons and daughters is an exceptional, even heroic, fulfillment of that responsibility.”

“All of those who enroll at AUC as students are benefiting from that gift of their parents and of the many who have sustained AUC in the past and who continue to do so.”

“I hope that all students will begin, even as students, to accept this intergenerational responsibility of full adulthood and begin ‘giving back’ to the AUC community in all appropriate ways,” said Ricciardone.

This willingness to serve is the main trait Ricciardone hopes AUC students would graduate with. “Selflessness, putting others before oneself, being an active part of the community — these are the true signs of maturity and adulthood,” he said.
INTO THE FUTURE: THE NEXT 100 YEARS
While continuity is what will carry AUC through its centennial. Ricciardone emphasized that AUC is “healthy, but not wealthy,” compared to other private universities in the United States, but its people are its strongest asset. “We have expert faculty; dedicated staff; bright and ambitious students; parents who care, are forward-looking and ready to sacrifice for their children; and alumni who are making a difference in the world — and who see that AUC helped launch their careers and enrich their lives. We have a fabulous new campus, and our reputation at home and abroad is very special and precious,” he said.

This reputation means everything to AUC. “Without it, we cannot build and strengthen our identity and cannot sustain our continuity,” Ricciardone affirmed. “But we can never take our reputation for granted amidst the global competition. We must live up to this reputation for excellence, and we can only do that as one, solid community.”

That’s why Ricciardone’s primary focus is strengthening the sense of community at AUC.

“If there is one thing that is a priority for me, what brought me here, it is our community: its health, its vibrancy and its impact on the world.”

“Every individual at the University should feel that he or she is part of a larger AUC community, both in Cairo and the world — an important and meaningful part,” he said. “Students, faculty, staff, parents and alumni should feel that they are each a co-equal and interdependent element with the others. We should all focus on our responsibilities and contributions, not just our rights: what we can give for the future, what we can contribute to AUC, and through AUC, to Egypt, this region and the world. As I mentioned in welcoming our new parents and students at the Fall 2016 Convocation ceremony, we should always remember four defining traits at AUC under one good acronym: G.I.V.E. — Giving, Integrity, Vitality and Excellence. That’s who we are.”
President Ricciardone and his wife, Dr. Marie Ricciardone, are no strangers to Egypt or the region. A molecular biologist, Dr. Marie has extensive experience networking with health professionals in the Middle East, North Africa and Turkey as she directs the Middle East collaboration programs of the Center for Global Health at the U.S. National Cancer Institute. Ricciardone is a former career diplomat with years of distinguished service in the Middle East and is former U.S. ambassador to Egypt. They both have a deep affinity for the land and people of the Nile.

“Marie and I feel very much at home in Egypt,” Ricciardone said. “As ambassador, I always used to say that every human being should come and experience Egypt. It’s not only a place to study the past, but also to develop science for the future. Egypt is all about continuity, durability and sustainability.”

The biggest draw of Egypt, however, is the warmth of its people. “When Marie and I lived here with our two young daughters, everywhere we went — from deserts, mountains and camps to cities, towns and people’s homes — we were warmly received,” Ricciardone recalled. “Some of the most vivid memories I have are climbing minarets in Mamluk Cairo, attending moulids like the Sayid El Badawi every year in Tanta, and meeting with AUC’s LEAD scholarship students and their parents when I visited Egypt’s governorates. Egypt has a rich history, and Egyptians should tell their own story to the world.”

Ricciardone highlighted AUC’s role in that respect. “We at AUC can help Egypt tell its story and keep its doors open to the outside world,” he said. “Where else would a curious young American, Chinese, European, Indian or Japanese come to study Arabic other than Umm El Donia? This is the center of gravity of the Arab world, and it’s especially rich, warm and welcoming.”

The total operating revenue for fiscal year 2016, which covered the period from July 1, 2015 to June 30, 2016, was $166.2 million. Total expenses were $157.4 million, resulting in an operating surplus of $8.8 million. However, when one factors in foreign exchange losses of $9.4 million due to the Egyptian pound devaluation, excess of investment returns over spending of $40 million and other non-operating adjustments, AUC incurred a $34 million loss on a consolidated basis.

The largest source of revenue was net tuition and fees, which generated $96.5 million. Revenue from adult education programs realized $12.7 million. Gifts and sponsored research income generated $19.4 million, and endowment support and interest income totaled $26.9 million.

The largest operating cost, $95 million, was spent on faculty and staff salaries and benefits. Supplies and services costs were $41 million, and depreciation expense was almost $22 million. These expenses are also categorized according to function as follows: academic and academic support represented about 54.7 percent of all expenses, or $86 million; administrative and general expenses followed at 21.1 percent, or $33 million; continuing education costs were about 8.8 percent of all expenses, or $13.9 million; auxiliary enterprises were 11.6 percent of all expenses, or $18 million; and research expenses were 3.8 percent of all expenses, or $5.9 million.
*Net Academic Tuition Fees
Gifts Used for Current Operations

Academic and Academic Support

This information is based on FY2016 contributions.
The AUC Annual Fund creates lifetime opportunities for outstanding students through scholarship and financial aid opportunities, in addition to furthering faculty research and expanding programs that enhance the quality of education at AUC. Every donor’s participation is a vote of confidence in AUC and works immediately to make a difference in enriching campus life.

PRESIDENT’S EXECUTIVE CLUB
Leadership contributions provide the University with flexible resources to support a wide range of important activities. In recognition of these generous donors, AUC has established the President’s Executive Club to recognize unrestricted annual commitments of $15,000 and greater.

1919 SOCIETY
Consistent giving is the cornerstone of the AUC Annual Fund’s success. To honor the many devoted donors who support the AUC Annual Fund year in and year out, AUC created the 1919 Society, named in honor of the founding of the University. The 1919 Society recognizes consecutive giving in increments of five, 10, 15 and 20 years.

The AUC Benefit Dinner is an annual event that helps connect AUCians in the United States with the extraordinary achievements not only of alumni, but of the University itself and distinguished guests of honor. The proceeds from the Benefit Dinner address the urgent need for undergraduate scholarship support, which allows the University to recruit the best and brightest students to AUC, regardless of their financial circumstances.

The listing that follows recognizes individual and corporate donors who contributed $1,000 and above to the fifth annual Benefit Dinner under the theme, Trailblazers in Global Business: Responsible Leadership and Social Impact.
